The Christmas season can be a season of mixed emotions. There are, of course, the positive memories from childhood or from special family times over the years. But as it is a traditional holiday for families, we are also reminded of brokenness that may exist in our family OR we are reflecting on the death of a loved one that occurred around the holidays (my dad died a week before Christmas 26 years ago) or of family members lost since last Christmas (I lost my older brother, a brother-in-law, and just recently a younger sister in 2022).

In this season, how important to remember that we are celebrating the birth of Jesus into our world. His coming gives a whole new perspective in the face of the brokenness and pain and death that is part of our present existence. Keep your eyes on Jesus in this Christmas season!
